

The first part of the manuscript is written in a dense, cursive hand. It begins with several lines of text, followed by a large, decorative flourish that spans across the page. The text appears to be a list or a series of entries, though the individual words are difficult to decipher due to the script.

alard

This section continues the cursive text. It features another prominent flourish, similar in style to the one above, which separates the text into distinct sections. The handwriting remains consistent throughout.

m clores

The middle portion of the page contains more cursive text. There are several horizontal lines that appear to be part of the original document or perhaps added for organization. The script is very fluid and interconnected.

trompetas

The bottom section of the page concludes with several lines of cursive text. The handwriting is consistent with the rest of the document. There are some larger, more decorative elements interspersed with the text.

censores

reposita

