

Handwritten text in a medieval script, likely Latin or a related language. The text is arranged in approximately 20 lines, with some lines starting with large, decorative initials. The script is dense and characteristic of the late Middle Ages. The text appears to be a formal document or a legal record, given the use of terms like "procurator" and "curia".

Decorative flourish or signature at the bottom of the page, featuring a large, stylized initial and a horizontal line with a decorative end.

