

This image shows an open medieval manuscript. The left page contains dense handwritten text in brown ink on aged, yellowish paper. A large, circular, brown stain is visible in the center of the left page. The right page features a prominent, stylized initial 'P' at the top right. The text is written in a Gothic script, typical of medieval manuscripts.

The last of the above. At about the same time, another, the wife of a man of rank, was imported from a small port in China, and was exhibited at the Royal Exchange. It had brought a quantity of cotton, and was said to have been made by a woman who had been captured by pirates, and had been sold to a Chinese merchant. The cotton was very fine, and was said to have been woven by hand. The woman was also said to be very handsome, and to have been well educated. She was said to have been taken from a ship, and to have been sold to a Chinese merchant. The cotton was very fine, and was said to have been woven by hand. The woman was also said to be very handsome, and to have been well educated.
The cotton was very fine, and was said to have been woven by hand. The woman was also said to be very handsome, and to have been well educated.

No 84

19
no are ever so rarely to see it
and to 14

35 - Diaper
grey grey

I senare är en elgen förgävande tiden föremål för viss rymd —