

Quia ad hunc usque diem et de nosse non est quod dicitur de illo saluo a vos los... (The text is extremely faint and largely illegible due to fading and bleed-through from the reverse side of the page. It appears to be a medieval Latin or Spanish document.)

Below the main body of text, there are several large, stylized signatures or initials. These are written in a cursive script characteristic of the late Middle Ages. The signatures are not clearly legible as names but represent individual or official attestations.
