

The first part of the manuscript is written in a highly decorative, cursive script. It begins with a large, ornate initial 'D' followed by several lines of text. The handwriting is dense and fills most of the page. There are several horizontal lines drawn across the page, some of which appear to be part of the original text or as section dividers. The ink is dark and the paper shows signs of age and wear.

The second part of the manuscript, located at the bottom of the page, consists of a few lines of text. It starts with a large, stylized initial 'D' and continues with several lines of cursive writing. The script is consistent with the first part of the document.
