

The first thing I saw when I came to the country was a great plain of grass and a few scattered trees. The people were very friendly and showed me to their houses. They lived in small huts made of mud and straw. The women were dressed in long, flowing robes and wore head coverings. The men wore simple tunics and trousers. They all seemed to be very hardworking and content with their lives. I stayed with them for a few days and learned a great deal about their customs and ways of life. They were very hospitable and I enjoyed my stay very much.
