

Faint handwritten text in a cursive script, likely a historical document or letter. The text is mostly illegible due to fading and bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.

A second block of faint handwritten text, continuing the document's content. The script is consistent with the first block, but the characters are even more difficult to discern. Some words and phrases are barely visible against the aged paper.

