and after his marriage engaged in various commercial enterprises. He died in 1863 at the age of 51.
He always spoke of the necessities which he observed amongst the poor and destitute, and made a special effort to help them. He was a member of the Methodist Church, and a regular attendant at services, and he would often remain in the church after services had ended, and talk with his friends about the welfare of the poor.
He was a man of great energy and determination, and he always tried to do what he could for the poor.
He was a member of the local church, and he was always ready to help those in need. He was a man of great character and integrity, and he was always a good example to others.
