

Handwritten text in a medieval script, possibly Latin or Old French, arranged in approximately 25 horizontal lines. The script is dense and cursive. Several lines are underlined with a single horizontal stroke. There are some decorative elements, such as a small floral mark on the left margin and a red mark at the end of a line. The text appears to be a continuous passage, possibly a letter or a legal document.

Faint handwritten text in the left margin, mirroring the main text on the right. It is mostly illegible due to fading and bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.

