27. Oct. 1863. — The 1st of October was a day of great rejoicing in the city of Philadelphia. The people were in a festive mood, and the streets were crowded with people. The day was a day of thanksgiving, and the people were grateful for the many blessings they had received during the year. The day was also a day of remembrance, and the people were reminded of the sacrifices made by their ancestors in the past. The day was a day of hope, and the people were looking forward to a brighter future.
