

THE HISTORY OF THE

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LONDON

IN THE YEAR 1700

The first meeting of the Royal Society was on the 28th of December 1660, when the members of the Society met at the house of Sir Robert Boyle in Oxford Street, London.

The members of the Society were at first only a few, but they soon increased in number, and the Society became one of the most illustrious in the world.

The first President of the Society was Francis Bacon, who was elected in the year 1662. He was a great philosopher and statesman, and his name is still remembered with respect and admiration.

The first Secretary of the Society was Christopher Wren, who was elected in the year 1663. He was a great architect and astronomer, and his name is still remembered with respect and admiration.

The first Treasurer of the Society was Robert Boyle, who was elected in the year 1664. He was a great chemist and physicist, and his name is still remembered with respect and admiration.

The first Librarian of the Society was Christopher Wren, who was elected in the year 1665. He was a great astronomer and architect, and his name is still remembered with respect and admiration.

The first Council of the Society was elected in the year 1666, and consisted of the following members: Sir Robert Boyle, Christopher Wren, Robert Boyle, and Christopher Wren.

The first meeting of the Council was held on the 1st of January 1667, and was attended by the following members: Sir Robert Boyle, Christopher Wren, Robert Boyle, and Christopher Wren.

