

1788
ARMED
1788

It is observed that the whole process of reading may be considered as the removal of the superfluous matter from the mass of matter intended to be read.
The process of reading is designed to remove the superfluous matter from the mass of matter intended to be read, and to leave the necessary matter in its place.
The process of reading is
designed to remove the superfluous
matter from the mass of matter
intended to be read, and to leave
the necessary matter in its place.
The process of reading is
designed to remove the superfluous
matter from the mass of matter
intended to be read, and to leave
the necessary matter in its place.

