

A large, stylized, handwritten number '2' in dark ink, oriented vertically on a piece of lined paper. The number is formed with a single continuous stroke, starting from a small loop at the top, curving around to the right, then looping back to the left to form a large oval, and finally curving back to the right to end in a small hook at the top. The paper has faint horizontal lines and some minor stains.

This image shows a blank, aged, cream-colored page, likely an endpaper or flyleaf of a book. The paper has a slightly textured appearance with some minor discoloration and faint, illegible markings or ghosting of text from the reverse side. The binding edge on the left is visible, showing the stitching or glue of the book's spine.
