

The first part of the book is a preface to the reader, in which the author explains the purpose of the work, and the manner in which it is written. He then proceeds to the main body of the text, which is divided into several chapters.
 The first chapter is entitled
 "Of the Nature and
 Properties of the Human Mind." In this chapter, the author discusses the faculties of the mind,
 and the manner in which they are exercised. He also discusses the
 various passions and
 affections of the soul,
 they are regulated. The second chapter is entitled
 "Of the Principles of Morality." In this
 chapter, the author
 discusses the nature of
 moral actions, and the manner in which they are judged. He also discusses the various
 virtues and vices of
 the human mind, and
 the manner in which
 they are cultivated.
 The third chapter is entitled "Of the Principles of Politics." In this
 chapter, the author
 civil society, and the manner in which it is governed. He also
 forms of government,
 and the manner in
 which they are
 regulated. The fourth
 chapter is entitled
 of Law." In this
 in which it is
 various branches of
 regulated. The fifth
 of Education." In
 this chapter, the
 author discusses the
 nature of education,
 which it is
 education, and the
 manner in which
 they are regulated.
