

In 1918 also I visited the area.
After a walk along the river I found some old German documents at the bottom of the Cetina river.
I took them to the museum in Split where they were dated 1718. They were written in German and Latin.
The documents concerned the rights of the people of the town of Cetina over the land around the river.
They were written by the town council of Cetina and the Bishop of Split. The documents are very interesting as they show the rights and obligations of the people of Cetina to the church and the town council.
The documents are written in Latin and German.
The town council of Cetina had the right to use the land around the river for agriculture and to collect taxes from the people who lived in the area. The church had the right to use the land for religious purposes and to collect tithes from the people. The documents also mention the rights of the people to use the river for fishing and to collect water for their needs. The documents are very important as they provide information about the history of the town of Cetina and the relationship between the town council and the church.
