

SYNOPSIS OF THE HISTORY OF THE
NORTH BRITISH PROVINCES

The first part of the history of the North British Provinces is divided into three periods. The first period is from the discovery of the country to the establishment of the first colonies. The second period is from the establishment of the first colonies to the union of the two provinces. The third period is from the union of the two provinces to the present time.

The first period is the most interesting, and the most important. It is the period of discovery and settlement. It is the period when the first colonies were established, and when the first attempts were made to cultivate the soil, and to build up a permanent population.

The second period is the period of consolidation and growth. It is the period when the two provinces were united, and when the first steps were taken to form a single government, and to establish a permanent system of laws and institutions.

The third period is the period of progress and improvement. It is the period when the North British Provinces have made great advances in agriculture, commerce, and industry, and when they have become one of the most powerful and prosperous provinces in the world.
